The Global Geopolitical and Geo-Economic Trends and their Implications for India Prof. Brahma Chellaney

Professor of Strategic Studies at the Center for Policy Research in New Delhi

The post-World War II global order is fraying. Multilateral institutions are losing relevance, globalization is under siege, and great-power competition — including "might makes right" — has re-emerged with a vengeance. A new age of international relations is dawning. How will it affect India?

Professor Brahma Chellaney is a global strategist with keen insight into geopolitics and power competition among nations. He is known for his deep knowledge and uses a rigorous, interdisciplinary approach to analyze complex global strategic issues, including natural-resource geopolitics. Chellaney consistently challenges dominant narratives, demonstrating his independent thought and commitment to democratic principles and strategic realism. His writing is marked by its clarity, precision, and objective arguments, always offering a global perspective with a distinctive edge.
